A Story of Hope

Jamie* came to the Women's Center alone, scared, and undecided. When we talked about her pregnancy, she said, "It's just not the right time." She confided that her fiancé was apprehensive as well since he did not have a positive father figure in his life while growing up. Jamie broke down in tears while she told us her story. She opened up and said she felt like abortion was the best thing for her and her fiancé, Cameron*, since they were planning to marry later in the year and weren't yet ready to be parents.

Both Jamie and Cameron attended the follow-up ultrasound a few days later. Jamie seemed to have an ease about her, and Cameron was quiet but kind. After the ultrasound, Jamie stated that she didn't care if it was a boy or girl, although she said she was leaning more towards a girl, and Cameron agreed with her. They were moved by the strong heartbeat heard during the ultrasound, and they left with pictures, smiles, and a plan to attend parenting classes. God's Will and a tiny heartbeat conquered their fears!
